It is essential for healthcare providers to be knowledgeable about human trafficking. Healthcare professionals are in a key position to help victims of human trafficking and stop this crime. Healthcare workers are often the first source of help that a victim of human trafficking encounters. Educating and advocating for victims can help save someone who might not otherwise have the chance to break free from the cycle of trafficking. This education activity defines human trafficking, identifies persons at risk and warning signs of being a victim, and shares standards for healthcare worker response if human trafficking is suspected.

The target audience for this educational activity is nurses in the long-term care setting, social workers, therapy professionals, nursing home administrators, and other interested learners. This is an intermediate level educational activity. Information is geared to practitioners with a general working knowledge of current practice trends and literature related to the subject matter. The focus is on increasing understanding and competent application of the subject matter.
